New Zealand has a higher rate of unique butterfly and moth species than anywhere else. But you won't see them all – these enigmatic and enchanting creatures can flutter along desolate coasts or in the highest mountains. (Brian Patrick, butterfly expert)

There are about 2,000 types of native New Zealand butterflies and moths. More than 90% are found nowhere else – this is the highest proportion of unique butterflies and moths in the world.

There is most variety in the South Island, where there are large open areas, which butterflies and moths prefer. After further PP Photos and Questions from members Neil Whiting gave a vote of thanks
